

Burnout

When you're running on empty for too long.

Burnout isn't a sign of weakness. It means you've been pushing yourself too hard for too long without enough rest.

What burnout can feel like no matter how much you rest.

Feeling overwhelmed by even small tasks.

Losing motivation and interest in things you used to enjoy.

Feeling irritable, impatient, or easily annoyed.

Remember this

You are allowed to slow down. Your worth is not measured by your productivity.

Take a moment to reflect

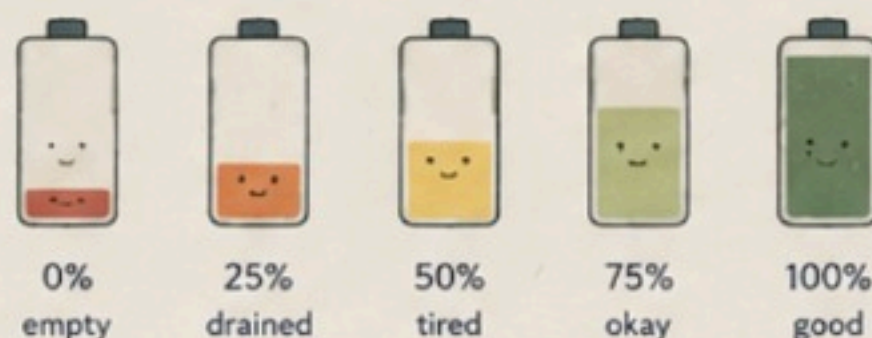

What's been draining your energy lately?
What do you wish you had more of?

Write it down. Get it out of your head.

Try this: Energy Check-In

Rate your energy today.

There's no "should" here. Just notice where you are.

What can help refill your cup?

Small things. Seriously.

Take a break

Go outside

Listen to music

Talk to someone

Do something you enjoy

Get enough sleep

Rest is not a reward. It's a right.

You deserve rest, too

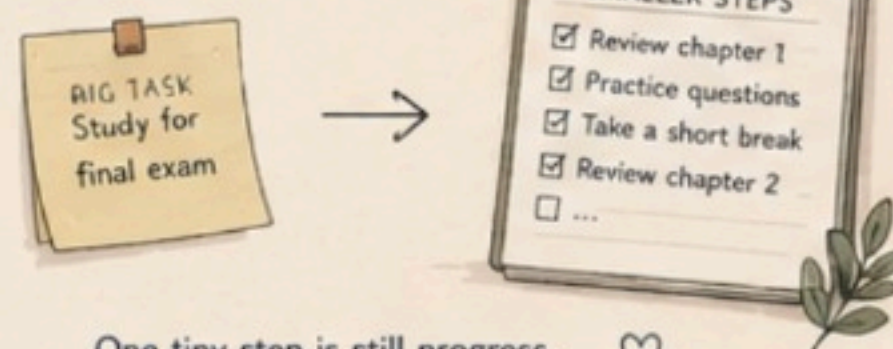

It's okay if today all you did was survive. You don't have to earn rest.

You are enough, even on your hardest days.

Break it down

Big tasks can burn you out. Small steps bring you back.

One tiny step is still progress.

Set boundaries

You can't pour from an empty cup.

- ☒ It's okay to say no.
- ☒ It's okay to rest.
- ☒ It's okay to choose you.

A gentle reminder

Burnout is your mind and body asking for care. Listen to it. Honor it. Heal at your own pace.

Need more support?

- Talk to Echo
Chat with Echo for support and reflection.
- Explore Resources
Helpful guides and activities are available for you.
- Reach out
Talk to a trusted adult or school counsellor.

Talk to Echo

