

EMOTIONAL NUMBNESS

When your feelings feel distant or muted, even when life around you keeps moving.

Emotional numbness is your mind's way of protecting you.
You are not broken.
You are coping.

This can look like...

Feeling blank or empty.

Losing interest in things you used to enjoy.

Feeling disconnected from yourself or others.

Going through the day on autopilot.

It feels like no emotions are coming.

Finding it hard to care or react.

Emotions can feel out of reach

You might not know what you're feeling right now.

Take a moment to reflect

“I don't know what I'm feeling.”

That's okay. You don't have to name it immediately.

Try this: Gentle Sensory Check-In

Notice small, neutral sensations around you. You don't have to feel anything—just notice.

Warm something

Soft something

Sunlight or light

A gentle sound

Something alive

Breathe slowly. Notice one thing at a time. No pressure. Just presence.

Small steps you can try

Write or doodle without trying to explain how you feel.

Move your body gently—stretch, walk, or breathe.

Drink water and take care of your basic needs.

Talk to someone you trust, even if you don't have the words yet.

You're allowed to feel again

Numbness doesn't last forever. You are allowed to take your time.

You are still here. And that matters. Healing can be quiet. And that's okay.

